The Two Birthdays.

year ago-a little year-I sat, a lenely thing, Awaiting what might be the cheer My birthday more should bring;
When lo! I heard a fluttering sound,
And, looking up, beheld
A troop of forms that flocked around,

Like fairies out of eld. All beauteous were they, winged with gold. And, as they danced in glee, The world no more seemed dark and cold. But made for joy and me.

I asked not whonce they came or why;
I knew as well as they.

Oft had they passed my threshold by.
But now had come to stay.

Like rose-buds garlanded they spanned My room from roof to hearth. They touched my lips, they clasped my hand I felt no chill of earth. And syren sweet, the song they sang

I wept for joy to hear.
'At last," the fairy chorus rang. We bring a blissful year. A year ago—a little year !— I keep my quiet room. No radiant forms with wings are here ; No fairy troop has come.

And all the happy thoughts they left fave faded like a dream. Sometimes I feel as one bereft. And sometime richer seem. Yet do I sit alone no more. One guest steals to my side; Ofttime I've heard her at my door,

At last I open wide. Half-nun. half-angel seems this guest, And pensive is her smile; Yet doth she cheer my birthday best, And solitude beguile.

re'er she goes she brings an air bringht calm and ease, rouge is as the south wind fair, at stills the troubled seas, aunot bring back banished hours, those fair hopes I weep; he can cover them with flowers, Where in their grave they sleep. M. Bethe ward in Good Words.
